PARIS.

[FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

October 13th.

A very few journals, or rather writers therein, continue to make a speciality of claiming for France, by right of treaty, the joint government of Egypt with England. But public opinion does not follow these casuists. I have conversed with very many Frenchmen on the Egyptian question who have "Egypt and the Nile" on the brain, but I could never get them to distinctly explain in what manner French interests in the land of the Pharaohs differed from those of Italy, Greece, &c. Frenchmen cannot see, being dazzled at England's dashing success, that in declining to uphold the authority of the Khedive, they have forfeited their rights to any special privileges he conferred on them for the administration of his kingdom, either jointly or singly.

There is not a cool-headed looker-on but unhesitatingly avows that if England consents to a re-patching of the joint control with France, the splendid Innings Sir Garnet has scored for her will be lost, and the opportunity will never again present itself for controlling her royal route to India. It is only under the tutelage of England that Egypt can become an Egypt for the Egyptians. Had England attempted to work India on the joint control principle with France, where would have been the splendid Empire of British India now? The nation that has redressed the native wrongs of India, and made its crooked paths straight, has still the ability to make five millions of fellahs great, glorious and free. If France were able to point to any success on her part in colonization, she might lay claim to some coin of vintage, but she has signally failed to develop her own colonies, which is not a certificate in her favor with regard to handling the destinies of other peoples. France is now in high fever to obtain colonial possessions, though she has no emigrants to send to them. She is going in for the territory of the heathen Chinee; she wants Madagascar; she intends disputing the Congo with Belgium; but progress in Algeria hangs fire, and Tunisia is anything but a model of organization.

To control the Egyptian exchequer along with England is not all that is required in Egypt: there are institutions to be developed about which France remains in the most blissful state of ignorance. Her work in civilizing Mahomedans is hardly to be named when what has been achieved by England is placed in the balance. A good naive army composed of Indian Mussulmans, and officered by Englishmen; civil service clerks to the manner born, directed by English chiefs; tribunals that will not know two forms of justice; taxes levied with unflinching fairness; and the extirpation of salvation armies while according full religious liberty to all—such is the kind of work cut out for England; and, to accomplish which she requires neither Turk nor Gaul to help, or to advise. If she adopt this charter, she will compel the French to be as mute as carps, or as M. de Lesseps is now. In any case, no nation will go to war to restore the joint control—the day dream of France, which she would give her eyes to have abolished in Tunisia, but where England holds her. There is nothing to prevent France going ahead in Syria, on the Congo, at Timbuctoo, in "Nova Zembla" or the Lord knows where.

Strenuous efforts are being made to galvanize Gambetta; but little success has so far attended the aim. Gambetta intends taking an active part in the coming parliamentary session, if such implies the ousting of the cabinet; however, that would be only forcing an open door. So long as divisions reign in the republican ranks, republican ministries will resemble but the duration of the snowflake on the river. The political education of the country is backward; the blind lead the blind. Men set themselves up as teachers without having graduated as students. Jupiter's head produced but one Minerva.

Attention is being directed to socialism, more, however, from the retrospective than from any immediate view. Indeed, as Thiers said, socialism has emigrated from France. Louis Blanc holds that all poor are socialists, but the spectacle to be witnessed now is the separation of the artisan or poorer classes from a band of political tramps who are pure demagogues, avoided by the true working men, laughed at by the audiences they collect, and too insignificant to be even watched by the police. The two Congresses which have just been held at St. Etienne Roanne prove that the age of Utopias and violence with the working man is past.

The powers of a standing army of three men and a corporal are proverbial, but their feats sink into insignificance compared with the achievement of the naturalized Italian de Brazza, who, in the name of France, and aided by ten grinning niggers, has taken possession of the Congo. Stanley considers the act as a coup de garni, and scouts the idea; he represents an Anglo-Belgian Co., and has no intention of being bowled out of the proprietorship of the Congo. But the matter has become complicated from the discovery that de Brazza has not been legally Frenchified, and so being an Italian subject, his "find" becomes the property of the Italian nation. The French are getting up steam on this subject, and demand their Government to at once back up their new-fledged countryman. One paper pleads that the dominions of the King of Congo would be an equivalent for the Khedive's.

The opening of a girl's college at Rouen is an experiment of no ordinary kind. It has the merit of being worked in that part of France, Normandy, reputed to have a population said to be the sturdiest in the universe. The inhabitants occasionally walk round each other, and that's equivalent to an eighth wonder of the world. Odd, too, that the trial should come off in the region reputed also the richest in France, and where the population wilfully refuses to increase and multiply. To allow her daughter out for a single instant is what no French mother ever dreams of; if kept at home, she will ever sleep in a bed-room off her mother's, and this Argus-eyed surveillance is continued all the girl's married off. If sent to a convent, or an ordinary young ladies' boarding school, the vigilance is also extreme. How far a government college can equal existing plans remains to be seen. French mothers are not opponents of a higher education for their daughters, provided it will not turn their heads, and that the superintendence be perfect. I know American and Russian lady students who have won high collegiate honors, which have made them accomplished without being blue-stockings, and sensible without being prudish.

Paris is filling rapidly, and the season, which is on the point of opening, promises to be brilliant. The number of rich strangers that have taken residences for the winter is markedly large. The theatres have opened with many excellent revivals, and a few trashy original plays not deserving of the honor of being named. We are waiting for the real opening of the theatrical ball, Sardou's new drama. Its representation must be near at hand, as the preliminary puffs are numerous. No French author can emancipate himself from the reclame and the claque. In a recent run through the Midland Counties, I was happy to meet with a calm uniformity of resolution among Englishmen that England will not allow herself to be elbowed out of Egypt. Esto perpetua. Accompanied by a very intelligent friend, and a warm admirer of Old Paris—we drove to visit Melbourne Hall, rich in souvenirs of perhaps the only English Foreign Minister never foreign to his duties. It was preaching to a converted to expatriate to me on the merits of that statesman, whose mantle it may be sincerely hoped, will fall on the Cabinet of the day. Melbourne is a typical English village, calm as a pastoral—a place for the weary to rest and the wounded to die. I do not intend entering into statistics of the village. I leave that to the Times; suffice it to say, that I visited the Athenaeum school; extremely orderly and clean; but, why not utilize its walls with colored prints of useful knowledge, to be periodically changed as in French primary schools? We can learn by the eyes as well as by the ears. The gardens of Melbourne Hall are extremely well kept: they are Versailles in petit, but then the designs of Le Notre have made the tour of the world like the tricolor. The yews and cedars have a greener green than I have ever observed elsewhere. Returning by Kegworth, another historical memento pleasingly visited was the house where Tom Moore passed his honeymoon. Not a slab, not a bust, to indicate this tower of roses by Blenheim's stream! To erect a mural slab to mark the place of birth or death of a celebrity is common; but to record a honeymoon—that carries home to every man's bosom, and is rare. To recall our pulling or lean and slipper'd Pantaloons stages, is less emotional than the greatest event in a man's life. My friend, who is himself no mean poet, lamented this absence of culte for the distinguished bard. Could the house not be converted, say into an hotel, and called "The Loves of the Angels," or the "Peri Arms"? It would be a thousand times superior to a Moira or a Donington Inn—though "Little Tommy" dearly loved a lord.

In reference to the right of a traveller to open or shut a railway carriage window—on one occasion two persons were voyaging in a diligence one objected to a current of air: the other replied, "I will be suffocated in a few minutes, but you will not catch a cold before three days." A man went into an old clo' shop at dusk—the favorite hour for timid purchasers; he selected a dark brown coat; in the morning he was horrified to find it was green colored; on taking it back, the "Ebrew recommended him to keep it till it got ripe. "What age is the Countess?" "She is two years more than my sister: three more than my cousin Jeanne, and five more than myself."

PAPER HUNTING.

Under the above heading a correspondent, who signs himself "An Enthusiastic Englishman," writes to the Shanghai Mercury on the 11th instant, as follows:—

Shanghai cross-country riding is about to commence, and our numerous sportsmen are each endeavoring to secure a good paper hunter. If a pony shows the slightest symptom of lifting his feet off the ground, his owner (in the majority of cases) immediately goes into an ecstasy, in spite of an inward impulse to be practical and to profit from the knowledge that the first real gallop over Shanghai country blights many a wild hope and cherished dream. It does not follow that because an ex-race pony, just from the course, plunges violently to get over a ditch of a few feet wide, that he will, when asked to gallop over rut and furrow and negotiate this cramped country. The two essential elements in a paper hunter are courage and intelligence. A speedy but flighty pony is all very well for larking across country, but for contending in a paper hunt it is not necessary to have a pony that can make good time on the flat. As to the training of a paper hunter there is no doubt that long and quiet work produces the most successful results. It teaches the ponies to be steady at their jumps and not to rush over hurdles. It also teaches them to take the ordinary jumps in their stride, and, when roused, to take the bigger ones with dash and determination.

To compare cross country riding in Shanghai with riding to hounds at home is impossible. Our ponies have to carry so much more weight in proportion to their size than horses, and the nature of the jumping is so different. The first impulse of a stranger here is to laugh at the smallness of the jump; but experience soon proves that there is a limit to the capabilities of our plucky China ponies. As much nerve and determination are required to bring a pony to the front in a paper hunt (we will except fast, strong, and scramblers) as to ride close alongside hounds at home.

As a hint to cross country competitors, I beg to point out that if they content themselves with jumping backwards and forwards over road-side jumps, they only encourage false hopes and do not get their cattle fly, except for sale. A paper hunt is a test of endurance and not calculated to screw up ponies, provided a little common sense is shown in their training. The time draws near for the Annual General Meeting of the Shanghai Paper Hunt Club. I wonder if any one has a new suggestion to make, or whether the running off of the handicap can be ensured during the season of 1882/1883?

Mr. MOORE begs to recommend his GOGO SHAMPOO WASH to the public as unrivalled by any preparation ever produced for promoting the growth of the hair. The basis of this compound is made of soap root; the natives of the Philippine Islands never use anything else for washing their hair; they are never found bald, and it is quite common to see the females with hair from 5 to 6 feet long. By constantly using this Shampoo Wash as directed, you will NEVER BE BALD.

The proprietor offers the Wash to the public entirely confident that by its restorative properties it will without fail arrest decaying hair. It completely eradicates scurf, dandruff, and cures all diseases of the scalp. It does not contain any poisonous drugs. By its cooling properties it allays the itching and fever of the scalp, which is the great cause of people losing their hair.

Mr. MOORE has succeeded in being able to put this wash up in bottles without allowing it to ferment, and he will guarantee it to keep any length of time in any climate.
